SUMMARY

Sinéad Specht is a Special Operations medic and instructor with nine years in the U.S. Air Force, building on prior service as a New York firefighter and EMT. She spent most of her career as a Special Operations Forces Medical Element (SOFME), performing casualty evacuation and base operational support downrange. She now instructs at Special Warfare, JBSA, teaching Tactical Combat Casualty Care and providing medical coverage in the field.

A National Registry and Flight Paramedic and SOIDMT, she brings critical care, austere and wilderness medicine, and technical rescue expertise. Her years of instruction, calm under pressure, and mission focus make her a trusted asset in high-risk, high-consequence environments.
